Advance Intelligence Today

Leadership Tools for Tomorrow

Harvey Robbins worked as a personnel research psychologist for the psychological services branch of the intergovernmental personnel programs division of the U.S. Civil Service Commission (CIA) and received his doctorate in clinical psychology from Texas A&M. He is the author of seven books received the 1995 Financial Times / Booz Allen & Hamilton Global Business Book Award.

Robbins' dynamic program will define the five engines that run successful teams:

- 👑 Goals
- 👑 Roles
- 👑 Breaking barriers
- 👑 Creating infrastructure supports
- 👑 Getting people to get along.

Creating and Sustaining A High Performance Team

The economy has stalled. Smaller companies are either being gobbled up or cobbled down. Larger companies are undergoing the largest merger-fest in U.S. history in order to stay globally competitive. The result of all this chaos is a shifting of resources. Hundreds of thousands of people are finding themselves in new roles with new responsibilities. The creating and execution of effective teams has become critical to every organization's success. This increase in the use of teams has put pressure on many leaders to learn how to run effective teams.

Using techniques learned while working with the Central Intelligence Agency, Dr. Robbins identifies the barriers to effective teamwork and provides solutions resulting in outstanding teamwork.
